2019 IMPACT REPORT

TRANSIT MONITORING

Transit monitoring is, as far as we know, the world's only tangible trafficking prevention model. The data we collect from potential victims we intercept and other sources sheds desperately needed light on the issue and is playing a key role in turning the tide in the fight against trafficking in many of the places we work. But far from being content with the progress, we are desperate to increase our impact, intentionally obsessed with the ones we have been unable to save.

FAMILY HOMES

The 212 wonderful children in our family homes continue to bless us richly. As these children grow through life, many transitioning beyond our homes into universities and the work world, we are still learning about how we can serve them and help them become difference makers in their nations. Our Dream School (playground pictured here) moved to a new and permanent site this year, and it is continuing to grow towards the vision we've been entrusted with for truly excellent education.

IMPACT STORIES

BENIN

Our team in Benin received an anonymous call about six minors located at the border who seemed scared and were accompanied by a suspicious-looking adult male. With the help of the police, our staff found the girls and took them to the police station. They then contacted the girls' parents who had been frantically looking for them for several days. During questioning, one of the young girls shared that they had all been promised work as domestic helpers by an acquaintance but were told not to inform anyone of their plans. All six girls were reunited with their families, and the police are continuing their investigation in an effort to locate the suspected trafficker.

NEPAL

Five young Nepali women found themselves destitute, alone, and looking for a way to survive. They unknowingly were preyed upon by a trafficker who promised them employment abroad in Kyrgyzstan, Dubai, Saudi Arabia, and Iraq. The girls were told to go to a border town between Nepal and India where they believed they would begin their journey to a better life. Stationed near the ticketing counter, our team spotted the girls and became instantly suspicious. After talking to the group, our staff uncovered more red flags. They alerted the police, and the trafficker was taken into custody for questioning. He led the authorities to two female traffickers who were behind this specific trafficking scam. Both women were arrested and convicted to 10 years in prison after being found guilty of attempted human trafficking. Our team educated the young women about trafficking and then helped them return safely to their village.

EMERGING TRANSIT MONITORING PILOTS

In 2019, we began pilots in Sierra Leone, Ghana, and Tanzania with Rwanda and Cambodia starting soon. Our vision for 2020 and beyond is to continue expanding transit monitoring to new countries where it is most needed, while increasing our presence within existing fields to make a bigger impact in the countries where we already work.
